Era of ATHANARIC

the Era of ATHANARIC

Teutonic history during the decade before the invasion of the HUNS is dominated by the figure ATHANARIC, who has fascinated posterity as much as he did his contemporaries. The Vesegölts of the 7th century still remembered ATHANARIC as their "founder King." Even in the scheme of the AMAL Origo (othier the non-AMAL ATHANARIC holds a special place, he is the first Gothic prince whose name cass 1000000 cites in derid speech. ATHANASIE'S revolts against Rome and his reconciliation with the emperor at the end of his life seemed exemplary for the history of both the identity in West and East. Because the Goths frequently persecuted the Christians, the church histories of the 5th century condemned him. He was also involved in Gothic tribal feuds during his entire life. Today Athanasie is considered the first representative of Gothic political life "about whom we are told more than his name". The ancient authors do not merely mention him or his activities but also ascribe to him revered mysteries.

There was a great earthquake

Valens was on his way to Syria and had already reached Bithynia when in mid-summer 365 he received this ominous report from his border commanders, the Gothic people, for a long time untested and therefore extremely wild are embarking in a confederation and preparing to attack the neighboring Thracian provinces.

Valens reacted immediately, sending horsemen and foot soldiers to the threatened areas. While marching through Constantinople, however, the elite units were won over by Procopius, who made himself emperor with their help.

June 19, 365

Valentinius gave the commander of the province of Dacia ripensis the order to restore watchtowers or have new ones built. Valens took similar measures in his section of the "Sabae bank". The setting up of a chain of stations was to prevent the intrusion of trans-danubian raiders. The itineraries of the two emperors exclude the possibility that the Sabae became restles before the spring of 365.

Usurper Procopius (East)

while Valens was awaiting the abating of the summer heat in Asia Minor, Procopius accomplished a double feat. Taking advantage of the alleged or real brother anger, he managed to annex all of Thrace and order the Tervingi to fulfill their obligations as federates. At this time ANAKIC was already the negotiating partner of the Romans; he was the man with whom Procopius established the written contract in the presence of the widow of Constantine II and with that emperor's small daughter on his arm, Procopius had presented himself to the army as a member of the FLAVIAN house; otherwise, he demanded military support from the Goths. In response 3000 Tevengon (the warrior) came to the usurper's aid. When they arrived in Constantinople they found Procopius no longer alive.
